Colonel Terrence B. Sheridan, Superintendent of the Maryland State Police and Chair of the Police Training Commission, offered reflective remarks on behalf of Maryland police officers. LaMonte Cooke, Director of the Queen Anne's County Detention Center and Vice-Chair of the Correctional Training Commission, expressed his sentiments for all of Maryland's correctional employees.

The following are the remarks provided by Colonel Sheridan and Warden Cooke.

Colonel Sheridan:

Spring brings the promise of new life, but it also includes the time we set aside to remember those public safety officers who have given their lives in the line of duty. This past Tuesday night, thousands gathered at the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial in Washington, DC to honor the more than 18,000 officers whose names are inscribed there.

Last Friday at State Police Headquarters, we honored the 39 state troopers who gave their lives while serving the people of Maryland. Of those, 23 died in traffic crashes, eight died from gun violence, six died in helicopter crashes, one in an airplane crash, and one died after falling through the ice while transporting food to starving people in a blizzard.

Those 39 state troopers are among 263 police officers in Maryland who have made the supreme sacrifice. Today, every public safety officer in Maryland continues to walk in the light left behind by these dedicated men and women who gave their lives for the people they swore to serve and protect.

Their lives were examples of accomplishment, diligence, compassion, and courage. Their deaths were examples of bravery, service, and ultimate sacrifice. In life and death, their light is a perpetual beacon that will never be extinguished.

FALLEN HEROES HONORED

It is our responsibility, as fellow public safety and law enforcement officers, to ensure these fallen heroes are never forgotten. It is our responsibility to make certain these fallen heroes are revered and held in the highest place of honor. It is our responsibility to perpetuate the legacy of courage and commitment these fallen heroes were the ultimate examples of.

To do so, it is incumbent on us to have ceremonies such as this to remember. It is incumbent on us as administrators and instructors to make certain the lives and sacrifices of the fallen are taught to our recruits in the earliest days of their career.

A few years ago, an individual who was far along in the applicant process to become a state trooper said he was no longer interested. The recruiter asked him why.

The applicant replied that he had never realized you could get killed doing this job.

Yes, a career as a police officer, a deputy, a correctional officer, a state trooper, is not one to be entered into lightly. The oath you take to serve and protect could mean being called upon to give your life in service to others.

That is why the work being done here at the Maryland Police and Correctional Training Center is so important. It is the obligation of education and training to ensure the safety of public safety officers.

You who are instructors are molding, shaping and influencing your recruits. You are equipping them with the mental and physical skills and information they will need to do their jobs well each day and go home safely to their families at the end of each shift.

I urge each one who is an instructor to remember the importance of the role you have. Do not let your failure to act be the cause of a former recruit's failure to react in a future life and death situation.

Governor O'Malley, Secretary Maynard, and many others are working hard to give you the resources needed to do your jobs more effectively and more safely. In the State Police, we have begun the transition to new, upgraded handguns. Just this week, Governor O'Malley signed legislation into law that will expand our DNA offender database and enable us to have a greater impact on reducing violent crime.

I know steps have also been taken in the Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services, and more help is on the way.

President Woodrow Wilson said, "There is no cause half so sacred as the cause of a people. There is no idea so uplifting as the idea of the service of humanity."

The Fallen Heroes we remember today believed and upheld the ideal of service to humanity. They proved their commitment by giving their lives in service to humanity.

The best way we can honor them is to recommit ourselves to the cause they gave their lives for and to do our best each day to reflect on their courage, bravery, and commitment to serve the people of Maryland.

LaMonte Cooke:

As President of the Maryland Correctional Administrators Association and the Vice Chairman of the Correctional Training Commission, I am honored to be a part of this very special occasion.

I am humbled to be in the presence of those of you who have chosen to devote your lives to this criminal justice field and to honor those who have made the ultimate sacrifice in the performance of their duties.

In my long career, I have had the unique experience of serving as both a peace officer and corrections officer. I have a deep appreciation for the challenges posed by officers serving in our communities as well as those maintaining the security in our jails, detention centers, and prisons.

I am also moved that we are acknowledging all of those we have lost, regardless of their official status because we recognize that any sacrifice impacts us greatly, both personally and professionally.

Recent events have shown the dangers present related to the internal duties performed by our 13,000 correctional brothers and sisters. Though not as visible as our criminal justice colleagues, we too confront the uncertainties of the unpredictable and dangerous environments in which we work.

Those recent losses of officers Wroten and McGuinn had as great an impact on us as did the loss of a deputy officer some years ago over on the Eastern Shore, and more recently the corporal on the highway not far from here. It also reminds us that we are subject to danger regardless of whether we serve in urban, suburban, or rural settings.

It is hoped that we keep in mind that in our capacities as police officers, deputy sheriffs, DNR, MTA, state troopers, or corrections officers, we all strive for the same goal - public safety. It is unfortunate that at times individuals in these various roles have had to make the ultimate sacrifice in order to ensure the public safety.

We can never forget and must make every effort to honor our fallen brothers and sisters and carry on their work with pride, dedication and professionalism.

DR. NORMAN RINGGOLD

Executive Director - Patrick L. Bradley

With the untimely demise of Correctional Training Administrator Patrick O. Smith in the summer of 2007 and the resignation of Correctional Training Coordinator Gloria Herndon shortly thereafter, the Police and Correctional Training Commissions found itself in dire straits with regard to the direction of correctional training. In addition to liaison responsibilities for nine certified correctional academies, approval of correctional training programs, review of applications for correctional instructors, and/or consideration of various waivers, these offices are generally responsible for ensuring the delivery of certification-oriented training for approximately 15,000 correctional personnel in Maryland. While some of the administrative responsibilities were absorbed by Deputy Director Lee Goldman, our only remaining operational/instructional resource within the Correctional Training Unit was Dr. Norman Ringgold.

Dr. Ringgold joined the Agency in the spring of 2006 as a part-time contractual employee. Norman is the Agency's correctional training specialist whose duties include the identification, design, development, and delivery of advanced and specialized correctional training programs in response to emerging public safety issues.

The burdens that were thrust upon Dr. Ringgold were unprecedented in the institutional memory of this Agency. The hiring freeze imposed by the State administration exacerbated our situation. Thankfully, he demonstrated that he was more than capable of handling the challenge. Dr. Ringgold was able to ensure that our demanding correctional training was not compromised. I am aware he traveled to the far corners of the State to represent this Agency at graduations, meetings, and other events. Throughout this period, I never heard that our representation was absent or less than the occasion demanded.

On March 18, 2008, PCTC received authorization to fill the vacancy for the Correctional Training Administrator, and we are now very pleased to have Ms. Jane Sachs in this position. With this appointment and the appointment of the Correctional Training Coordinator, Mark Radcliff, we will be able to relieve Dr. Ringgold of his extra duties.

I would like to take this opportunity to convey my appreciation to Dr. Norman Ringgold for his extraordinary service to the Police and Correctional Training Commissions and to Maryland's correctional community. It is comforting for me to know the Police and Correctional Training Commissions have members like Norman Ringgold who are ready, willing, and able to "step up" whenever the occasion demands it.

Jane Sachs

Correctional Administrator

My name is Jane Sachs and I would like to introduce myself as the new Correctional Administrator for the Maryland Police and Correctional Training Commissions (MPCTC). I recently joined the MPCTC staff after retiring from a thirty-year career in Corrections with the Montgomery County Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation Pre-Release Services Division. While studying at American University in Washington, DC, I began my service in Montgomery County as a student intern. From there, I worked my way up through the ranks, moving from correctional officer, to counselor, to trainer, to the position of Supervisor of Administration and Training, and, finally, to the post of unit manager.

For many years I was very involved in the training arena as both a trainer and training coordinator for my agency. In addition, I served for two years on the Board of Directors of the International Association of Correctional Training Personnel (IACTP) as the Secretary. Furthermore, I served as a consultant to corrections and law enforcement staff across the nation for training in the areas of ethics, gender sensitivity, cross-training, and integrity. I have also been fortunate to serve as a Chapter Director for Neal Trautman's National Institute of Ethics as well as a lead instructor for Law Enforcement Training Systems (L.E.T.S.). Articles I have written on such topics as the correctional professional and the need for ethics training have been published in Corrections Today and the Law Enforcement Trainer. My work as a trainer has allowed me to serve in that capacity for the American Jail Association, the National Institute of Corrections, and the American Correctional Association.

Howard County, MD is where I grew up and raised my family, and I still make my home there. I am the mother of two grown children who currently live in New York.

I am delighted to be part of the MPCTC team and look forward to working with our many partners.

NATIONAL NIGHT OUT

The National Association of Town Watch (NATW) will once again sponsor National Night Out Against Crime throughout the country. Now in its 25th year, this event will take place on Tuesday, August 5, 2008. This is a national crime prevention demonstration during which residents are asked to turn on outdoor lights and spend time outside with their neighbors and local law enforcement. It is designed to heighten crime and drug prevention awareness, generate support for and participation in local anti-crime programs, strengthen neighborhood spirit and police-community partnerships and send a message to criminals, letting them know that neighborhoods are organized and fighting back.

In 2007, over 34 million persons representing over 10,000 communities from all 50 states, the U.S. territories, Canadian cities, and military bases worldwide, participated in National Night Out. Many communities throughout Maryland have planned activities such as crime prevention fairs, block parties, cookouts, walks, and McGruff appearances for the 2008 celebration.

As their website states, "National Night Out has proven to be an effective, inexpensive, and enjoyable program to promote neighborhood spirit and police-community partnerships in our fight for a safer nation."

The MCCPI encourages jurisdictions to participate in National Night Out. For registration material, contact the National Association of Town Watch, PO Box 303, Wynnewood, PA 19096 or call 1-800-NITE-OUT. To learn more, you can also visit their web site at www.nationaltownwatch.org.

GOVERNOR'S CRIME PREVENTION AWARDS

Each year the State of Maryland honors law enforcement agencies, officers, citizens, and programs for their contributions to the furtherance of crime prevention programming in Maryland. MCCPI would like to take the opportunity to highlight some of these efforts in Training Notes. In this issue, we are featuring the Aberdeen Police Department Camera Surveillance Project.

Once found principally in large cities, violent street gangs now have an effect on public safety, community image, and the quality of life in communities of all sizes in urban, suburban, and rural areas. No region of the United States is untouched by gangs, and in 2001, Harford County began to see signs of gang activity.

In its quest to reduce criminal activity and enhance the quality of life of its residents, the City of Aberdeen has begun developing a city-wide surveillance system that can be monitored by the Police Department. This program required a partnership between Comcast Cablevision and the law enforcement community. The first step was to install surveillance cameras that could capture any criminal activity. Within the first 30 minutes of online video, three successful arrests for drug distribution were made.

The surveillance program was implemented in several stages. The first three stages--research and evaluation, development and utilization of existing technology, and the installation of the cameras--are complete. The fourth phase, training of personnel, is still ongoing, as is the fifth phase, the evaluation of program effectiveness. Each month statistical data will be downloaded, evaluated and used to study crime trends and enforcement strategies. With increased development and support from private and public entities, the camera surveillance program is designed to grow and become a major crime prevention tool in Aberdeen.

For more information on the Camera Surveillance Project, contact the Aberdeen Police Department at 410-272-2121.

The Institute hopes to feature other awards recipients in future editions of Training Notes. If you are interested in learning more about their accomplishments or more about the Governor's Crime Prevention Awards Program, call the MCCPI Office at 410-875-3425.

RESEARCHING TRAINING TOPICS

by Jennifer Beskid, Administrator

Developing Trainers – How?

As I speak with people in both my professional and personal travels, I am always amazed by the number who are interested in becoming trainers. Currently, there are more than several hundred instructors certified through the Maryland Police and Correctional Training Commissions. In order for an instructor candidate to complete the certification process, there is a tremendous time commitment required for both the instructor and the agency personnel. Therefore, I thought I would use this opportunity to explain how the process of developing trainers is handled.

When an individual expresses an interest in training or an instructor is able to identify someone who has the potential to be a good trainer, it is possible to “check them out” by giving them a teaching trial without compromising program certification. An individual may instruct for up to three hours without being certified by the Commissions. By arranging for a prospective candidate to instruct for a finite segment of class time, training directors and other department personnel have an opportunity to assess an individual’s primary skills, and it also allows the candidate to get a sense of what training actually entails.

When an instructor determines that the individual could be a possible candidate, he may consider submitting an application for provisional instructor certification for that person. This allows the candidate to instruct for one year, for an unlimited number of classroom hours, on any general law enforcement or corrections topic for which the candidate has demonstrated proficiency/expertise. This offers the training director further opportunity to evaluate the candidate’s skills. It also gives the candidate additional time to further consider the decision to become a trainer. A drawback to this is that once provisional instructor certification has been granted, the clock starts ticking.

Within the one-year provisional time frame, law enforcement officers must take and successfully complete a Training-for-Trainers program. These programs can be from five to seven days in duration and frequently include homework. Another option is the Enhanced Instructor program offered by the Commissions; however, these are frequently filled early on in each calendar year. Because regulations only allow for a one-time renewal of provisional instructor certification under exceptional circumstances, it is important to enroll the candidate in a Training-for-Trainers program within one year of the provisional certification.

Finally, it is critical that the candidate receives feedback about his performance to know whether he has the potential to be a good instructor. It is also important for the candidate to understand what is expected of him as an instructor, should an agency commit to developing them as trainers, as it is for their agency to understand what they expect the role of the trainer to be once he is certified.

I often receive inquiries from individuals who have developed a terrific program they believe will benefit law enforcement and corrections personnel. They want to know more about becoming a certified instructor in order to have their programs approved and then be able to offer their training. When I direct them back to the training unit of their respective departments, they indicate a strong preference to instruct in specific topic areas only. The departments must review each situation individually in order to ensure that they use each trainer to the best of his/her abilities and talents.

To review the regulations for additional information, you may use the following link <http://www.mdle.net/regulations.htm>.

DRUG ABUSE RESISTANCE EDUCATION D.A.R.E.

At the request of D.A.R.E. International and the Department of Defense Dependent Schools (DODDS), Claude Nelson, State D.A.R.E. Coordinator at MPCTC, assisted with training 28 U.S. military law enforcement personnel from military installations throughout the Pacific. The training took place in Okinawa, Japan from April 28 through May 9, 2008. The D.A.R.E. certified military officers provide D.A.R.E. instruction to children of military and civilian personnel stationed overseas who are attending DODDS schools located on military bases. Claude served as mentor for the Blue Team.

The 2008 Maryland D.A.R.E. Officer Training is currently scheduled for September 14-26, 2008 and will be held at the Public Safety Education and Training Center in Sykesville. Graduates will be certified in the D.A.R.E. Curricula for Elementary and Middle School, and they will receive training as D.A.R.E. School Resource Officers as well as instruction about bullying, gangs, and Rx/OTC drugs. Interested parties or agencies should contact the State D.A.R.E. LEGAL NOTES

by Holly L. Knepper, Assistant Attorney General
Maryland Police and Correctional Training Commissions

U.S. SUPREME COURT

Search - violation of state law. Police heard a radio report that David Moore might be driving with a suspended license. After confirming that was the case, police arrested Moore for the misdemeanor of driving on a suspended license. The officers searched him incident to arrest and found that he was carrying crack and over $500 cash. Under Virginia law, police should have issued Moore a summons instead of arresting him since driving on a suspended license is not an arrestable offense. Moore was charged under state law with possession with intent to distribute drugs. He unsuccessfully moved to suppress the drugs and cash that the police found when they searched him, arguing that the Fourth Amendment required suppression because the police should have only given him a summons and could not do a 'search incident to summons.'

Moore was convicted, and his appeal went to the U.S. Supreme Court, which took the case to decide whether police violated the Fourth Amendment by making an arrest based on probable cause but prohibited by state law. "When officers have probable cause to believe that a person has committed a crime in their presence, the Fourth Amendment permits them to make an arrest, and to search the suspect in order to safeguard evidence and ensure their own safety." The police had sufficient probable cause to arrest Moore, and the fact that Virginia law says his crime was non-arrestable was irrelevant to whether police violated the Fourth Amendment by arresting and then searching him. The Court refused to link Fourth Amendment protections to state law, because this would change Fourth Amendment protections by state. The Court concluded that warrantless arrests for crimes committed in the presence of an arresting officer are reasonable under the U.S. Constitution, regardless of how states may regulate such arrests. Virginia v. Moore, 128 S.Ct.1598 (2008).

FOURTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS

TASER- excessive force. Sonja Orem, the wife of a former sheriff's deputy, was served with a protective order after she ransacked her husband's offices, kicked a hole in a wall, assaulted her husband and threw his belongings in their front yard. Orem left the house, but then became enraged when she discovered that she would not be able to see her son for 6 months; she drove back to the house at a high rate of speed, skidded into a ditch, left her car and charged at a police officer. Orem was arrested for disruption and assaulting an officer and was restrained with handcuffs and a hobbling device, and secured in the back seat of a police car behind the cage, with the hobbling device fastened around her ankles and secured by extending its strap out the back and front passenger doors of the cruiser. While being transported to jail, Orem yelled, cursed and banged her head against the cruiser window three or four times, and her banging around was so intense that the cruiser rocked, loosening the hobbling device and requiring the transporting officer (Deputy Boyles) to pull over. Deputy Rephann was in a separate cruiser, voluntarily following Boyles to jail, and knew Orem and what was going on. When Boyles pulled over so he could tighten the restraint, so did Rephann. Rephann got out and approached Boyles' cruiser with his TASER drawn, and he told Orem to calm down. She screamed back that she could not calm down and that she was upset because her husband had beaten her and she wouldn't be able to see her son. Rephann warned her to calm down by clicking the TASER, and then "shocked" her twice with the TASER—under her left breast and on her left inner thigh. Orem was then transported to jail without incident. At the time, she weighed 100 lbs and Rephann weighed 280 lbs.

Orem sued Rephann under 42 U.S.C. §1983, claiming that he violated her constitutional right to be free from excessive force. The lower court ruled that Rephann's use of force was unreasonable and refused to grant him qualified immunity. On appeal, the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed. The facts indicated that Rephann's actions were wanton, unnecessary, or sadistic rather than a good faith effort to restore order. He did not help Boyles tighten the hobbling device, but instead verbally engaged Orem, and when she talked/cursed back at him, he applied the TASER. Rephann acknowledged that he had violated department policy that required the use of open hand measures before applying the TASER, but argued that he used the TASER so Orem would not endanger herself. Also, Orem's right side was closer to Rephann, so it appeared that his reaching across her to apply the TASER to her left breast and inner thigh (which left a permanent scar) was intended to harm or embarrass her. Orem was restrained and caged in the car, and the two other deputies on the scene did not see a need to use force on her, nor did anyone try to help Boyles tighten the hobbling device. The court refused to grant Rephann qualified immunity. Affirmed. Orem v. Rephann, 523 F.3d 442 (4th Cir. (W.Va) 2008).

MARYLAND

Identity theft. Section 8-301(c) of the Criminal Law Article provides that "[a] person may not knowingly and willfully assume the identity of another," without their consent, for certain purposes." The word "another" is not defined in the statute. Kazeem Ishola was charged under §8-301(c) after he tried to open a checking account using a Florida driver license with the name "Christopher Pitera;" he also possessed a New Jersey license with the name "James McNicolas." Police investigating the case were unable to identify any individuals with either of those names. Ishola was ultimately convicted of violating §8-301(c), and he appealed. The CSA ruled that, for purposes of §8-301, assuming "the identity of another" means assuming any identity other than one's own. But the Court of Appeals ruled that fictitious persons are not included within the meaning of "another" as that term is used in §8-301(c) and concluded that because the law refers to an individual who fails to consent to his or her identity being used, the Legislature intended to prohibit the use of an actual person's identity rather than a fictitious one. This means that the prosecution needed to prove that Ishola assumed the identity of some person who actually existed in order to convict him under §8-301(c). Conviction reversed. Ishola v. State, __Md.__ (2008) (2008 WL 961040).*

Traffic stop - Terry search - container. Ernest McDowell was the passenger in a pickup truck pulled over by a trooper who observed it being driven very erratically. The trooper pulled the truck over off Rt. 301, a rural, poorly-lit area, and when he approached the truck, noticed that the driver and McDowell were both very nervous. He also noted that McDowell was "staring straight" and "just appeared...to be out of it." Neither occupant had identification, but the trooper went back to his cruiser to run license checks on the names both men gave him. While sitting in his cruiser, the trooper could see McDowell make several movements bending down and twisting in his seat. The trooper was concerned that McDowell was retrieving a weapon, so he called for backup, which was 15-20 minutes away. The trooper walked back to the pickup and stood behind the passenger side window where, in the glow of his cruiser's high beam lights, he saw McDowell reach under his seat, then behind his seat, into a gym bag that was about 2 ½ feet long by 1 ½ feet wide, large enough to hold a weapon. The trooper knocked on McDowell's window and asked what was in the bag; he said he was looking for cigarettes. Believing, based on his experience and Academy training, that the gym bag held a weapon, and that it would be foolish to leave the bag in the truck with another person, the trooper asked McDowell to exit the truck and bring the bag. The trooper searched the bag and found drugs and paraphernalia. Backup arrived, and McDowell was arrested; a search incident of both McDowell and the truck turned up more drugs and paraphernalia. Facing many drug charges, McDowell moved to suppress the drug evidence, arguing that the trooper unlawfully searched the gym bag. The motion was denied; McDowell was convicted and appealed the suppression decision.

The Court of Special Appeals (CSA) held that the search of the gym bag was constitutional under the circumstances. The CSA pointed out there was no question that the stop was valid and that the trooper lawfully removed McDowell from the truck. Regarding the search of the bag, police may conduct a protective Terry search for weapons if they have reasonable articulable suspicion (RAS) that criminal activity is afoot and the individual to be searched is armed and presently dangerous. The CSA concluded that the trooper articulated specific facts from which he reasonably believed that McDowell had immediate control of a weapon via the gym bag, so that the search of the bag was justified by RAS. The CSA rejected McDowell's argument that the trooper should have just separated McDowell from the bag and patted down the outside of the bag for weapons. The CSA held that "when a Terry-type search for weapons of the passenger compartment of a motor vehicle is constitutionally permitted and, during such search, a container is found in which a weapon may have been placed or hidden, a police officer may open and inspect the container without first patting it down....When a valid Terry-type search for weapons results in the discovery of illegal drugs and drug paraphernalia, the officer need not ignore the contraband, and the Fourth Amendment does not require its suppression...." McDowell v. State, __Md.App.__ (2008) (2008 WL 1970352).*

Search warrant - "premise." Police who were part of a drug task force applied for a search and seizure warrant for evidence of CDS activity at Herbert Walls' residence, which was described in the application and supporting affidavit as "a certain premise and vehicles known as 30 Liberty Street" in Aberdeen. The affidavit described the appearance of the house and sought permission to open and search all "safes, boxes, bags, compartments or things [related to the illegal CDS trade] found in or upon said premises...." While executing the ensuing warrant, police found the backyard was completely fenced in, with the back section of fence abutting Aberdeen Proving Ground. In the yard was a padlocked shed about 20-25 feet from the house, at the rear of the property nearly flush with the back fence. While searching the residence, detectives learned from other officers on the task force that Walls began storing CDS in the shed after police raided his house several months earlier. Task force members opened the shed with a key and found lawn equipment, drugs, and paraphernalia. Drug charges followed.

Walls moved to suppress the evidence found in the shed, arguing that the warrant specified the "premise" of 30 Liberty Street without mentioning the shed and that the shed was not within the curtilage of the house. The circuit court denied the motion; Walls was convicted and appealed. The CSA rejected Walls' argument that the search of the shed was beyond the scope of the warrant. The use of the term "premise" rather than "premises" did not limit the permissible search to the actual residence. The warrant application documents "were drafted by police officers, in the usual course of their work, not by legal linguists, and should not be read hypertechnically;" therefore, "premise" was properly construed to mean the building and grounds at 30 Liberty Street. The shed was part of the curtilage of the house because it was within the fenced-in backyard, was padlocked, and there was no indication that it was used for any business purpose. Although the CSA prefers that all buildings subject to search actually be identified in the warrant, the warrant authorized the search of the shed because that is the kind of outbuilding that is ordinarily associated with a premises and its curtilage. Moreover, even if the warrant had not authorized a search of the shed, the CSA would have affirmed the suppression decision under Leon's good faith exception. Police were entitled to rely on the language of the warrant that expressly authorized them to open and search all boxes, compartments, etc. found in or upon the premises, so it was not unreasonable for them to believe they could search the shed. Walls v. State, __Md.App.__ (2008) (2008 WL 820380).*

Driving on revoked license. Christopher Sullivan had never been issued a Maryland driver's license and did not qualify for any of the statutory exemptions from the driver licensing requirements. Sullivan was pulled over and ticketed for driving on a revoked "license or privilege to drive" in violation of §16-303 of the Transportation Article (TR). At trial, Sullivan moved for acquittal, arguing that he could not be convicted of driving on a revoked license because he never had one and, therefore, never had one revoked. The court disagreed and convicted him; he appealed. As a matter of first impression, the CSA held that Sullivan could not be convicted of driving while his "license or privilege to drive" was revoked unless he once had a license (or an exemption). The appropriate charge should have been driving without a license (TR §§16-101, 16-102). Conviction reversed. Sullivan v. State, __Md.App.__ (2008) (2008 WL 1990946).*
